CREATING STORYBOARDS

Before Steven Spielberg or other moviemakers start filming, they draw storyboards. A storyboard is just a sketch of what a movie scene will look like on the screen. If you drew storyboards of an entire movie, it would look like a big comic book! There would be a sketch of every scene, showing where the actors will be and what they'll be doing!

Modern storyboarding got its start with the early Walt Disney cartoons. Mapping out what would happen in the film with pictures saved the animators a lot of time and money. Eventually, live action moviemakers started to use storyboarding too, for the same reasons. Today, just about any film that has special effects in it gets storyboarded before shooting starts.

Storyboards are a great way to plan your movie before you start filming. Here are some storyboards from the LEGO Studios movie, "Dino Cop." Watch the movie on the Web at www.LEGO.com/studios and see if you can spot the scenes sketched on these storyboards!

HOW TO MAKE YOUR OWN STORYBOARDS

Draw a rectangle about 4"x3" on a piece of cardboard. Ask an adult to cut it out so you have a frame.

Using the cardboard frame as a guide, draw a frame on a piece of paper. Each frame represents a scene. Now you can draw what action is happening. Below each frame you can write the action, what special effects or sound effects you're using and the dialogue.

ACTION: MAJOR MARS WALKS TOWARDS HIS SPACE SHIP.
EFFECTS: STOP-MOTION ANIMATION
DIALOGUE: "WELL I GOTTA RESCUE KING LEO FROM THE DINOSAURS... JUST ANOTHER DAY IN THE LIFE OF A HERO!"

Meet Steven Spielberg

A T-Rex rampaging through a major city! A giant UFO coming to Earth! A monster shark on the loose!

These might sound like the kind of exciting stories you tell with your LEGO sets. But they're actually the plots of some of Hollywood's biggest hit movies, all made by the same man: Steven Spielberg. "Jurassic Park" and "Jurassic Park 2", "Close Encounters of the Third Kind," and "Jaws" are just a few of the awesome films he has directed in his career!

You've probably seen Steven Spielberg's movies - but did you know he made his first amateur film when he was only 12?

At 23, he started making movies for a major Hollywood studio! Since then, Steven Spielberg has directed over 35 movies and television shows, and produced many more.

All of Steven Spielberg's proceeds on the #1349 LEGO & Steven Spielberg MovieMaker Set are donated to the Shoah Foundation and the Starbright Foundation.

For tips on making movies, visit the LEGO Studios Film School online at www.LEGO.com/studios

Are You the Next Steven Spielberg?

If you're interested in making movies, the LEGO & Steven Spielberg MovieMaker Set is a great way to get started! You can use the special PC movie camera to make films starring your favorite LEGO characters. Then play your movies on your own computer!

Steven Spielberg tries his hand at making movies with the LEGO & Steven Spielberg MovieMaker Set.

My visit to LEGOLAND[®] California

My family and I went to LEGOLAND California. What a totally awesome place! We had so much fun going on all the rides and seeing the life-size models -all made out of LEGO bricks! Here are some of our favorite rides!

It was really fun to power-ski through the waves on your very own wave racer while dodging water blasts!

We rode on the LEGO TECHNIC Coaster, twisting and turning all over the place! It was the best!

We got to ride the Dragon Coaster right through Merlin's Castle!

You won't believe your eyes in Miniland! They used over 20 million bricks to create 1,000 buildings!

Coming this Summer!

The Life on Mars Show is wild! Martians, an astronaut, even an aero-tube hangar, all right on stage, and a really exciting story! You'll feel like you're really in outer space!
